To whom it may concern:

I am part of a worldwide network that is working on getting the BeOS operating system back into the market place, but there is no hope of success if the following issues aren't addressed:

- 1) open MS Office file formats
- 2) open Win32 APIs
- 3) mandatory dual-boot options (i.e. multiple operating systems per computer)

In addition, it is clear that Microsoft should be split into two parts - one for the operating system itself, and one for software (and any other non-operating system components). This will help reduce the advantage it's own software has on the MS Windows platform.

On top of that, a huge fine for it's illegal and unethical strongarm tactics.

Sincerely,
